

Our project engineer and contractor have been working hard to get us complete purity tests on the system, but there is one area of the system which is stubbornly refusing to come up clean. Today after noon the entire system will be chlorinated again from the pump station. This is to protect water quality while the engineers/contractors find the problem area.

Please go ahead and use water as normal, since we need to flush this chlorine through the system. Other than taste, the amount added has no negative aspects.

During the next week, the contractor may choose to isolate areas of the island for flushing. If that happens, we will do our best to notify you using this method and the web site, plus white boards. If you have questions or concerns, please email me. Do not phone the office, as I will not return until Saturday and then Tuesday.

Thanks again.
